

Professor Anita Chan

Co-editor

The China Journal

Anita Chan is co-editor of The China Journal and a Visiting Fellow at the Political and Social Change Department of the Australian National University. She was formerly a Research Professor at University of Technology Sydney. She began her academic career examining the political socialisation of the Red Guard generation, Chinese rural society, mass protest movements, Chinese dissidents, and human rights issues. For the past three decades her research has focused on Chinese labour issues, including work conditions in China's automotive industry; Chinese industrial relations; Chinese state enterprises; labour conditions and trade unions in foreign companies in China and in Vietnam; the global production chain and corporate social responsibility. Her twelve authored, co-authored and edited volumes include Children of Mao (1985), Chen Village (2009), China's Workers under Assault (2001), Labour in Vietnam (2011), Walmart in China (2011) and Chinese Workers in Comparative Perspective (2015). Her current research project compares the industrial relations systems of Vietnam and China.
