Helping Students from Deprived Families Amidst of COVID-19

Abstract

School suspension has created much challenge to teachers, students and parents in the new learning environment. Students have been overwhelming by the online teaching and assignments. Some of the parents are unprepared for this quarantine measures which has led to some conflicts in competing for space and computer usage. With the support of the HKJC Covid-19 Emergency Fund, partnership with a parent-focused organization, is working with volunteers to set up a daily livestream for children in school suspension, offering them some alternative learning experiences. The response is encouraging. New initiatives have been developed in the process of helping these students.
