

Major Country Diplomacy in the Changing World Politics: The “China Plan” for a New Era of International Relations

Abstract

The world politics today is undergoing change, reform, and transition on an unprecedented scale. Facing this fast-changing world, what China's choice, role, and influence will be attracts extensive attention from the global community. This lecture will introduce how China promotes its own vision for diplomacy in this new era with a focus on the current development of international affairs, the relationship between China and major countries in the world, and China's participation in important international institutions. Besides, the speaker will also discuss the external relations of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region under the “One Country, Two Systems” framework.