

The Latest Development of China-US Relationship and Hong Kong's Role

Abstract

The evolving relationship between China and the United States is one of the most critical topics of our time. Over the last four decades, the China-U.S. relationship has undergone impressive transformation from animosity and conflict to candid dialogue and constructive cooperation; yet, in recent years, both countries must face important new opportunities and challenges in terms of this pivotal bilateral relationship for the entire world. A rising need has become clearer today that China and the United States find an appropriate way to work together to deal with essential issues across the boards, including military security, balanced trade, advanced technology, climate change, regional “hotspots”. As one of China’s gateways to the world, Hong Kong naturally has its indispensable role in the scene. This forum will focus on how China and the United States could move forward and identify areas of cooperation between the two powers to tackle global challenges, as well as on how can Hong Kong play a constructive instead of destructive role in the process.