

Professor Zheng Hui

Department of Sociology
The Ohio State University

Biography

Professor Zheng Hui is a Professor of Department of Sociology at The Ohio State University. He is a demographer, social epidemiologist, and quantitative social scientist.

Professor Zheng research focuses on understanding the causes, heterogeneity, inequality, and trends of population health and aging. His work is supported by grants from CDC (National Center for Health Statistics) and NIH (NIA, NICHD), covered by major media outlets including Time, New York Times, The Atlantic, USA Today, Newsweek, and The Times (UK), and granted Eliot Freidson Outstanding Publication Award Honorable Mention (2019) from ASA Medical Sociology Section. He was a consulting editor at American Journal of Sociology, served in the editorial boards of Journal of Health and Social Behavior and Journal of Marriage and Family, and was a council member of medical sociology section of American Sociological Association. He is currently an advisory editor of Social Science Research.