

James Raymo

Professor of Sociology

Henry Wendt III '55 Professor of East Asian Studies

Office of Population Research, Department of Sociology

Princeton University

James Raymo is Professor of Sociology and Henry Wendt III '55 Professor of East Asian Studies at Princeton University. At Princeton, he is also the Director of the Office of Population Research, the Founding Director of the Global Japan Lab, and the Faculty Director of the Strategic Partnership between Princeton and the University of Tokyo. Raymo received his Ph.D. in 2000 from the University of Michigan and was on the faculty in the Department of Sociology at the University of Wisconsin-Madison for 19 years before moving to Princeton. Raymo is a social demographer whose research focuses on documenting and understanding the causes and potential consequences of demographic changes associated with low fertility and population aging, with a particular focus on Japan.

His published research includes analyses of marriage timing, divorce, recession and fertility, marriage and women's health, single mothers' well-being, living alone, family change and social inequality, employment and health at older ages, and regional differences in health at older ages. Raymo's research has been published in top U.S. journals such as American Sociological Review, American Journal of Sociology, Demography, and Journal of Gerontology: Social Sciences as well as in Japanese journals. He currently serves as a Co-Director of the international community of scholars called Research on East Asian Demography and Inequality, on the editorial boards of leading journals, and was as the vice-president of the Population Association of America in 2023.